

KINGJAMES VERSION BIBLE, can you forgive somebody, but not accept their apology?

According to the King James Version (KJV) Bible and mainstream Christian teaching, you can forgive someone even if you do not accept or receive their apology—or even if they never apologize at all. The Bible emphasizes the importance of forgiveness as a personal act, not necessarily dependent on the other person's repentance or apology.

Key points from the KJV and Christian teaching:

- Mark 11:25 (KJV): Jesus says, "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses." This implies that forgiveness is something you do in your heart, regardless of whether the other person has apologized^{[1][2]}.
- Matthew 18:21-22 (KJV): Jesus tells Peter to forgive "seventy times seven," emphasizing the ongoing nature of forgiveness, not its dependence on repeated apologies^[3].
- Luke 6:27-28 (KJV): Jesus commands, "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." This teaching extends forgiveness and love even to those who are unrepentant or hostile^[4].
- Personal release vs. reconciliation: Forgiveness in the biblical sense is often about releasing bitterness and anger from your own heart. However, full reconciliation or restoration of relationship generally requires repentance and apology from the other party. You can forgive someone in your heart without restoring the relationship if trust has been broken and there is no genuine repentance^{[5][1]}.

"We must do our part in the forgiveness. This is what Jesus meant, I think, when he said, 'Love your enemies . . . bless those who curse you, pray for those who abuse you' (Luke 6:27-28). They are still our enemies when we do that. They have not asked for any forgiveness, and they don't think they need any, making life miserable for us — and they think they ought to. We are to bless them, and that blessing means that our part of the inward forgiveness has happened."^[4]

In summary:

You can forgive someone without accepting their apology, or even if they never apologize. Forgiveness is a command and a personal act that frees you from bitterness. However, reconciliation and restored trust may require genuine apology and repentance from the other person^{[1][2][5]}.

I forgive them ,but do not accept specific apologies.

You can forgive someone while not accepting specific apologies, especially if those apologies do not acknowledge the true nature of the wrongdoing or lack genuine repentance. According to biblical principles, particularly in the King James Version context, forgiveness is primarily an act of the heart—a release of bitterness and a willingness to let go of resentment—regardless of the quality or presence of an apology^{[6][7][8]}.

The Bible distinguishes between an apology (expressing sorrow or regret) and asking for forgiveness, which involves taking responsibility and seeking reconciliation^{[9][10]}. You are called to forgive, even if the other person only offers an apology that does not address the real issue or fails to ask for forgiveness directly^{[7][8]}. This reflects an attitude of forgiveness in your own heart, as taught in passages like Mark 11:25 and Luke 6:27–28^{[7][8]}.

However, restoring a relationship or full reconciliation may depend on the other person's willingness to truly repent and seek forgiveness, not just apologize^{[10][7]}. You can forgive inwardly and release the offense, but you are not required to accept an apology that lacks accountability or sincerity.

In summary:

- Forgiveness is a personal, inward act that does not depend on the quality or even the presence of an apology^{[7][8]}.
- Accepting an apology is different; you are not obligated to accept apologies that do not reflect true repentance or responsibility^{[9][10]}.

- You can forgive and still maintain boundaries or wait for genuine accountability before restoring trust^{[7][8]}.
